Why Follow-Up Wins Jobs

Here is something I have seen over and over: the roofer who follows up wins the job more often than the roofer with the lowest price. Homeowners get busy. They get three quotes, life happens, and the quote sits in their inbox. The company that checks in at the right moment is the one they remember.

Most roofers send the quote and wait. That is leaving money on the table. These five templates give you a complete follow-up sequence, from the thank-you you send today to the re-engagement email for quotes that went cold months ago.

Every template is written the way a roofer talks to a homeowner. Fill in the [BRACKETS], hit send, and move on to the next one.

The full sequence at a glance: Day 0 (thank you) > Day 3 (check-in) > Day 7 (urgency) > Day 14 (last chance) > 60+ days (re-engagement). Details on timing are on the last page.

Template 1: Same-Day Thank You

Send: within 2 hours of the appointment. Goal: thank them, recap what you discussed, and set the expectation that you will check in.

SUBJECT LINE (PICK ONE)

Subject: Thanks for today, [FIRST NAME] - your quote is attached

Subject: Your roofing quote from [COMPANY NAME]

EMAIL BODY

Hi [FIRST NAME],

Thanks for having me out today. I have attached your quote for the [roof replacement / repair] at [PROPERTY ADDRESS].

Quick recap of what we discussed:

- [Scope item 1, e.g. Full tear-off and replacement with architectural shingles]
- [Scope item 2, e.g. New flashing around chimney and vents]
- [Scope item 3, e.g. 10-year workmanship warranty]

Take your time looking it over. I will check in with you in a few days in case any questions come up.

[YOUR NAME]
[COMPANY NAME]
[PHONE NUMBER]

P.S. If anything in the quote is unclear, just reply to this email or call me directly. I would rather answer it now than have you wonder about it later.

Template 2: The 3-Day Check-In

Send: 3 days after the quote. Goal: stay top of mind, answer questions, keep it light. No pressure.

SUBJECT LINE (PICK ONE)

Subject: Any questions on your roofing quote?

Subject: Checking in, [FIRST NAME]

EMAIL BODY

Hi [FIRST NAME],

Just checking in on the quote I sent over for your roof. I know these decisions take a minute, so no rush at all.

If anything came up while you were looking it over, or if you got other quotes and want a second opinion on what you are seeing, I am happy to talk through it. Sometimes the fine print between quotes is where the real differences hide.

[YOUR NAME]
[COMPANY NAME]
[PHONE NUMBER]

P.S. The most common question I get at this stage is about timing. Right now we are booking about [X] weeks out, so there is no crunch, but I wanted you to have the full picture.

Why this works: You are not asking "are you ready to sign?" You are offering help. That keeps the door open and positions you as the roofer who actually explains things.

Template 3: The 7-Day Follow-Up (Urgency)

Send: 7 days after the quote. Goal: introduce a real reason to decide soon. Only use urgency that is true.

SUBJECT LINE (PICK ONE)

Subject: Heads up on scheduling, [FIRST NAME]

Subject: Your quote + our current schedule

EMAIL BODY

Hi [FIRST NAME],

Wanted to give you a quick heads up. Our schedule is filling up for [MONTH/SEASON], and I want to make sure we can get your roof done before [weather concern, e.g. the heavy rain season / winter] if you decide to move forward.

Your quote is still good, and nothing about the price has changed. I just did not want you to get stuck waiting if the schedule tightens up.

If you are leaning toward going ahead, let me know and I will hold a spot on the calendar for you. If you decided to go another direction, no hard feelings at all, just let me know so I can close out the file.

[PHONE NUMBER]

P.S. Either way, a quick reply helps me plan the crew schedule. Even a "still thinking" is useful.

Important: only mention scheduling pressure if it is real. Homeowners can smell fake urgency, and it burns trust. If your schedule is genuinely open, skip this angle and just ask what is holding up the decision.

Template 4: The 14-Day "Last Chance"

Send: 14 days after the quote. Goal: get a clear yes or no. Polite, direct, and final.

SUBJECT LINE (PICK ONE)

Subject: Should I close out your file, [FIRST NAME]?

Subject: Last check-in on your roofing quote

EMAIL BODY

Hi [FIRST NAME],

I am doing a cleanup of open quotes and wanted to check in one last time on yours.

If the timing is not right or you went with someone else, I completely understand. Just hit reply and let me know so I can close out your file. No hard feelings, and if anything comes up with the roof down the road, you know where to find us.

If you are still interested, the quote is still valid for [X] more days, and I would be glad to get you on the schedule.

[COMPANY NAME]
[PHONE NUMBER]

P.S. Sometimes people go quiet because a different quote came in lower. If that is the case, send it my way. I will tell you straight whether the difference is real savings or corners being cut.

Why the breakup email works: giving someone permission to say no often gets you a yes. It also gets you the real objection, which is more valuable than silence.

Template 5: Post-Decline Re-Engagement

Send: 60 to 90 days after a lost quote. Goal: reopen the conversation. A surprising number of "no" quotes come back.

SUBJECT LINE (PICK ONE)

Subject: How is the roof holding up, [FIRST NAME]?

Subject: Quick hello from [COMPANY NAME]

EMAIL BODY

Hi [FIRST NAME],

It has been a couple of months since we talked about your roof, so I wanted to check in and see how things are going.

If you ended up getting the work done, I hope it turned out great. If it is still on the to-do list, I am happy to take another look. Sometimes a few months changes what makes sense, and I can update the quote if anything about the situation has shifted.

Either way, hope all is well.

[PHONE NUMBER]

P.S. We are running a [seasonal inspection special / free gutter cleaning with any roof work] right now if the timing works out better than it did before.

Follow-Up Timing and Cadence Guide

The sequence only works if the timing is right. Too fast feels pushy. Too slow and they forget you. Here is the cadence:

Day 0 - Thank you email
Within 2 hours of the appointment. Recap the scope, attach the quote, set the expectation you will follow up.

Day 3 - Check-in
Light touch. Offer to answer questions or compare other quotes. No ask for the sale.

Day 7 - Urgency follow-up
Real scheduling or seasonal reason to decide. Never manufacture urgency.

Day 14 - Last chance
Direct ask for a yes or no. The breakup email. Many silent quotes answer here.

Day 60-90 - Re-engagement
Check in on lost quotes. Circumstances change. This email alone has revived dead quotes for a lot of roofers.

Three rules for the whole sequence

- Every email gets a reply-to that you actually read. A no-reply address kills the whole point.
- Stop the sequence the moment they respond. Nothing burns goodwill like an automated-feeling follow-up after a real conversation.
- Personalize one line per email. Reference something from the appointment: the dog, the oak tree near the garage, the leak over the kitchen. One real detail beats a perfect template.
